CAN I Learn to Fly?

By WILLIAM R. NELSON

Gliding and Landing

"WELL do take off and landings. You know how to take off and I want you to do it without my help," said my instructor. "The landings will be easier than you think."

I had heard other students say how difficult landing an airplane seemed at first, and I had misgivings about that, however. My instructor apparently sensed my fears and attempted to dissipate them.

"Landing is not a mechanical maneuver," he continued. "But it is a nice piece of 'feel' flying you will pick up by practice. You take off and I'll tell you what to do as we come in. Relax. Don't be so tense. I'll correct anything you do that's wrong."

My take-off was ragged, but with his help we got off and flew around the "pattern" at 1,000 feet. Just after we made the third turn he cut the motor to idling, which was my signal to push the stick forward slightly and hold it there for the glide in.

"Keep the nose down in gliding," he cautioned through the phones. "If the plane slows up noticeably the nose is not down far enough. That is dangerous. You may stall and 'spin' in. If the plane picks up speed, your angle of glide is too sharp."

He signaled for another turn. I became confused and had to be helped in it. Banking the plane with its nose almost straight downward in a glide was a strange experience. There was nothing I could use as a guide to tell me exactly where we were, what my angle of glide was, whether or not I was diving the ship too fast, or when to come out of it.

My instructor helped me straighten out and as we neared the ground he spoke again:

"Start bringing the stick back slowly at about twenty feet from the ground. Just level out slightly there and hold the stick still. Now work it back slowly. Not too fast. Now back some more. Now that nose comes up? Not too fast. Make it come up without climbing. Bring the stick back some more."

As the stick came full back we settled onto the ground in a forward sliding movement.

For forty-five minutes we kept it up. Each time I made mistakes. And each mistake he corrected.

Let me live in a house by the side of the road.

Where the rate of men go by. They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong. Wise, foolish—so am I. Then why should I sit in the corner of a room?

DISHERS THAT ARE GOOD

Lamb is a most desirable meat, but it is too often served only as expensive cuts as leg of lamb or crown roast. However, there are many cheaper cuts which are equally as palatable.

Post Roast of Lamb

Post Roast of Lamb—Take four pounds of the best of lamb, wipe with a damp cloth and rub well with salt and pepper mixed with flour. Place in a roasting pan with six tablespoons butter, three tablespoons oil, three cups of water, two cups of sugar, two cups of vinegar and one cup of salt. Roast in a hot oven for three hours. Then reduce the heat and cook until tender. Add a few minutes to the cooking time if the meat is old. Remove the meat and keep it hot. Pour the sauce over the meat and serve with potatoes.

THE NEW FORD

Everything you want or need in a motor car

THE more you see of the new Ford, the more you realize that it brings you everything you want or need in a motor car. . . . And at an unusually low price.

Its substantial beauty of line and color is apparent at a glance. Long, continuous service emphasizes the value of its simplicity of design and the high quality that has been built into every part.

The new Ford accelerates quickly and it will do 55 to 65 miles an hour. It is an easy-riding car because of its specially designed springs and four Houdaille double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers. It has fully enclosed four-wheel brakes and the added safety of a Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield. Operation and up-keep costs are low and it has the stamina and reliability that mean thousands of miles of uninterrupted service.

See the nearest dealer and have him give you a demonstration ride in the new Ford. Check up every point that goes to make a good automobile and you will know it is a value far above the price.

THE GRAND OLD PAIR

By FANNIE HURST

THEY were a grand old pair. That was how the local press eulogized them upon the celebration of their fiftieth wedding anniversary.

They deserved the appellation. Their fifty-year life together had omitted all those qualities that go to make up the human scene. Helen and Lazarus Bradstrop had lived well and tenanted their home with a family that they reared in harmony and union. Four girls and boys were the issue of it. All, with the exception of two sacrificed war, grown and out of the nest.

Even the nest that had borne them had passed. With the marriage of their last child, Allen, to a French count, the old couple, responding to the assurance, had agreed to give up the old brown stone family home and the quiet, compact quarters of an apartment hotel.

They worked, too. They frankly enjoyed the new freedom from responsibility. The relief from the pressure of large household machinations. For the first time in almost half a century, Lazarus found himself with his hands free. For the first time, Helen was free of the burden of a family.

was forever getting herself talked about in one boisterous capacity after another, and at one time was reported to have eloped with the family chauffeur.

So, unwelcome as the viscount marriage was, it was with some relief that the Bradstrops saw her safely enmeshed in a marriage that at least carried with it the undeniable tincture of respectability, even though young Leland was known for a certainty to be anything but conservative.

He was a young man somehow, who seemed forced into it. There was a transient quality about Leland. You expected catastrophe to overtake him, one way or another. It was in his cards. It was in his eyes.

Ten years after his marriage to Allen, Leland had broken her, as the saying goes. Her spirit lay a dead thing within her. Gone was the ice-glitter from her eyes, and the shoulders that had always defied, were tamed somehow. It was a different Allen who came home. A rather heart-broken edition of her former self.

Leland had fulfilled the Bradstrop prophesies. Gradually it was all to come out. Not so much from what Allen was ever to say. But piece by piece, the whole sordid story was unconsciously to reproduce itself before her family.

Leland had been a rotter, both as a husband and a father. His children had lived in terror of him. That was what had broken Allen. Leland had once struck his little four-year-old twins in a drunken fury. There had been a scar along one small arm for months. His sons had cringed from him. These small children had come to know terror early.

The pain of that was graven into the face and heart of Allen. And Allen brought home with her one desire; indeed it might be said that Allen brought home with her one obsession. She wanted for these pallid children of hers the kind of youth she had known in the old brown family mansion of her childhood. She not only wanted for them that kind of youth, but the identical setting. She wanted the old house on Pine street which her parents had long since sold to a Catholic school and which was now used as the dwelling place of twelve monks who conducted the institution.

At first the idea seemed too fantastic even to bear discussion. The brothers and sisters of Allen rose in a unanimous mass against the idea of the parents ever being asked to resume any of the duties of home and household.

It must also be said that Helen and Lazarus themselves, who were contemplating a long-remembered trip to the Orient, drew away from the prospect. In a way, Allen bowed her head before the selfishness of her demands and the unanimity of the decision against her. She took up her residence, at the willing bounty of her family, in the same hotel with her parents. There her children, strange youngsters reared in the French tradition, sought to adapt themselves to new environment.

There, Allen, so sobered that there was pathos in her very aspect, sought to cause to shine upon these starveling offspring of hers, some of the radiance of the kind of children that had been hers.

In a way she succeeded. Even in the hotel environment Helen and Lazarus were to get a glimpse in the lives of their grand children that was vital and important.

They lived in closest proximity, the grand children part of the very fabric of each. And yet there came a time when Helen realized that there was to be no trip to the Orient, no continuance of the career, a life that contained no household worries, no problems of upkeep.

Allen's children needed a home. Each and every one of the brothers and sisters rallied around to combat the determination, even Allen herself protesting as she contemplated the worn, lined faces of her parents.

But in the end it was the determination of Helen, finally aided and abetted by Lazarus, that won the day. At no small expense the Bradstrops succeeded in buying the town all old home on Pine street back from the monks, who surrendered it reluctantly, for succeeded to the great-grandchildren.

The Bradstrop home is going again. It is being sold, and during the last days, several house-holding boxes and guns, and the children of Allen rose in and out, to school, from school on roller skates, on roller skates.

The grand children are as hard put as they ever were in their lives. The house is filled with the hurry of feet, the demands of small voices, the cries of childish altercation.

Helen is laid to rest with duties; Lazarus full of work, working wages and attempting to grand children.

There is to be no travel. Allen has finally succeeded in bringing home to her brothers and sisters the fact that, with all their trials, the years have fallen away from her parents in a fashion that is unusual.

Oxford County United Parish

Embracing Albany, Center Lovell, No. Lovell, Stoneham and Waterford. Pastoral Staff: Revs. W. I. Bull, R. A. Brandon, A. C. Townsend.

The Pastors have been making New Year's calls during the holiday season, the aim being to visit every family in the territory, leaving with them a souvenir calendar. Some over 250 such calls have been made, with a few neighborhoods yet to be visited. The Pastors have gone together in making these calls.

The Council held its semi-monthly meeting at East Stoneham last Thursday. Business occupied the forenoon. After dinner served by the Stoneham ladies, and after some unfinished business, an address was delivered by Rev. Chris. A. Groezinger of Norway on "Some Neglected Aspects of Education."

At this meeting the Council voted not to ask for the usual appropriation of $100 from the Maine Missionary Society (Congregational) for this year. Rev. W. I. Bull was called to Massachusetts last Friday by the death of an uncle. He will also be absent a part of the week on Conference business. In his absence the pulpit at Waterford was supplied by Mr. Glen McIntire of Norway, a loyal friend and a Councilor-at-large of the United Parish. The other services were cared for, with this exception, by the other two men of the Staff. The Albany service was omitted, partly on account of bad roads, and partly on account of bad roads.

Services at the East Waterford school house were resumed last Sunday afternoon by Rev. Mr. Townsend. A large attendance was present. It is the plan to hold these services once in two weeks, alternating with the Forum services at South Waterford. This Forum is proving very interesting and popular. The topic Jan. 18th was "Neighbors," and out of it came the topic for next Sunday evening, "Community Service or World Service, Which?"

Plans are being perfected for classes in vocal music in the Parish in the near future. The Crooked River Outing Club is making plans for the next Winter Carnival and Drama.

NEWRY

Carl Hake's has quite a crew of men at work for him in the woods, cutting. Two teams are hauling the logs to the mill where Mr. Campbell and his crew are sawing the logs into strips to be made finally into "heels."

G. H. Learned has been hauling some green wood for Mrs. D. C. Smith. The big fall of snow we had last week made some business for the snow plow. The traveling was so bad one day the school team could not get through so there was no school that day.

F. I. French was in town one day last week. Harry Isaacson was in town last week with a cart filled with clothing for the family.

Ralph Young has finished running the lines on the place known as the Bailey farm.

The Best Time to Advertise

The best time to advertise is when advertising will do the most good.

Not in many years has a condition existed in this country when it was so necessary to advertise and advertise liberally.

Everyone is thinking hard times. It has been talked too much. Many people who have not suffered any curtailment of income have reduced their purchases radically. They are buying only what they absolutely have to have, and sparingly of that. They have been influenced by the talk and atmosphere of hard times until they have come to feel that they too are hard up and must curtail their buying.

The opportunity of the merchant at this time is not only to present his wares and create a desire for them through advertising, but to help dispel the atmosphere of gloom and depression that has settled down over the country and affected the buying of merchandise so generally.

Good, live, optimistic advertisements that tell of the good merchandise, first class service and right prices will do more to bring about a normal business condition in this community than anything else that can be done.

The Citizen is, more than ever before, prepared to offer real service to its advertisers, assistance in the preparation of advertising copy and reaching more readers than before to its readers, an opportunity to profit by the offerings of its advertisers.

Just give us a call for complete details of our greater advertising service. It places you under no obligation and offers a practical solution of the present "bad business."

HISTORICAL TREES

PRESERVED BY D. A. B.

Officers of the National Society of the D. A. B. for this year will designate another American tree which is worthy of preservation because of its historical importance.

This action will be taken in order to preserve the tree's purpose to maintain living monuments between the present and the past. The tree will be planted by Henry Tree Surgeons, whose services are available to all.

Since tree is thus to be preserved, and all the trees that have been planted for posterity are to be kept in good health and for posterity, the following, many of the nation's most beautiful trees have been the victims of neglect and some of them are in such a condition that their preservation of life is a necessity.

The former Land Office site at Monmouth, N. J., thought to be the oldest in that state, was destroyed last year. The tree was the condition of the patient that a major operation was necessary. The tree was destroyed when the first permanent English settlement was made in the Northwest territory. The tree was the last of a line of trees that settled the land. The tree was made and preserved. The tree was tied up with all the hopes and dreams of the pioneers in this.

CHURCH ACTIVITIES

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

L. A. Edwards, Pastor
9:30 Church School. Miss Ida Packard, Superintendent.

Next Sunday we start our contest. Our school is equally divided and each side is to work for new members and regular attendance. A new member counts 100, and attendance for the full time from Sunday, Jan. 18th, to March 29th counts for your side 500. Every Sunday that you are present it counts 25 for our side. Let's get away to a flying start next Sunday; and each side begins to make their plans to enjoy the party that must be furnished for the losing side. Remember the rules: Nobody will count for your side taken from another school.

10:15 Morning Worship, Subject of prayer by the pastor will be "Sins." The meaning of Aps-16:11, (One Sins) was communion the twelve and sent them out. There were two big words in the vocabulary of Jesus, Come and Go.

COURAGE AND PATIENCE

Out of despised Nazareth came a carpenter's son. He walked by the sea of Galilee and called upon some simple fishermen to follow Him. For three short years he mingled with the common folk in that far-distant land in a day when the earth itself was sparsely populated. Why should we fret because His teaching has not subjugated the entire world of today? Is it not astonishing that, with this unassuming beginning, it has become the mightiest power it is? His teaching has influenced the world. It is the greatest force in the world for good. Shall we doubt, as we look back over the centuries, an effect upon the obstacles it has encountered and survived, that "all men shall know the Lord, from the least even unto the greatest?" Courage and patience on the part of Christians will surely bring it to pass.

Gould Academy Notes

Miss Lucy Kellogg of Hallowell is teaching domestic arts in place of Miss Stuart who was obliged to give up her work at the end of the fall term on account of illness. Miss Kellogg has had several years experience and comes to Gould with excellent recommendations.

A series of girls' inter-class basketball games opens Thursday afternoon when the Seniors will play the Juniors. The teams are evenly matched so the game promises to be an interesting one.

The dormitory girls are rehearsing for the presentation of a one-act comedy, "Just a Little Mistake." This play, together with specialties, will make up an entertainment the proceeds of which will be added to the radio fund.
